

Sleeping in Class

(Acts 20:6–12)

Paul decided to return to Jerusalem. On his journey, he passed through Troas and spent a week there. During that time, the believers in Troas gathered together to hear Paul's teachings. Paul was leaving the next day, and wanted to teach them as much as possible before he left. He taught for many hours in an upper chamber, speaking past midnight.

A young man named Eutychus was sitting in a window and grew so tired that he fell asleep and fell to the ground from the third story. It was such a high fall that he died. Right away, Paul ran down to Eutychus and prayed while embracing him, and the young man came back to life, which was a great encouragement to all.

Paul then went back inside, had something to eat, and continued teaching until dawn, when he departed.
